

VIEW POINT OUTDOOR SPACE DESIGN

At Red Square, we firmly believe that the exterior walls of a property should not become the outer limits of an interior design project. Understanding how outdoor space will be used is critical to good internal space planning and an essential part of any interior design project.

As well as ensuring there is appropriate access to external areas, a factor influencing interior design is how the line of sight from the property can be enhanced. This may entail repositioning doors and windows, or installing subtle garden lighting to enhance the features in the garden.

By undertaking the design of the garden and interior at the same time, design detailing will flow naturally between internal and external spaces. Materials will complement each other and suit their surroundings and planting, appropriate to the local weather and soil conditions found at the property, to reinforce the overall sense of place, which is so important to allow any scheme to sit comfortably within its natural surroundings.

With the increased use of home automation, security cameras and wireless technology, there are now many practical reasons – in addition to design and aesthetics – why undertaking internal and external design together, makes sense. Touchpad controlled irrigation systems and scene set mood lighting all form part of a new scheme and need to be fully integrated from the outset.

As part of our comprehensive interior design solutions, we are now working in partnership with Woodhams Landscapes Ltd, a leading garden design company with a highly prestigious portfolio of gardens ranging from small penthouse terraces to country estates. Woodhams' signature statements and high impact graphic planting is now acknowledged worldwide and their gardens are becoming recognised as iconic statements of the 21st century. In addition to having an unrivalled ability to interpret a design brief and create stunning results, their ongoing garden management service is highly valued as an integral part of establishing the scheme and protecting the investment.
